

Leehee is a lawyer and policy professional specializing in energy, infrastructure, climate change, carbon markets and resource governance. She is the VP of Policy & Head of Legal at Oporto Carbon, an Israeli company financing high-quality carbon credits and helping companies around the world decarbonise.

As a senior lawyer and litigator, in her previous position as Director of the Economic Department at the Israeli NGO Adam Teva V'Din, she led some of the most important environmental lawsuits of the last decade: successfully securing amendments to the government's road map for the offshore natural gas industry; preventing the expansion of the oil refinery in Haifa; limiting the industrial use of Dead Sea water and led to the approval of the National Energy Efficiency Plan.

With over 20 years in the policy and climate space, she has extensive experience leading cross-sectoral collaboration. Leehee has led successful partnerships and coalitions with high-level decision makers, stakeholders in civil society & the private sector on complex, multi-disciplinary projects.

She is an active member of the Indices Committee of the TA-125 Fossil Fuel Free Climate Index, the Dead Sea Guardian's Advisory Board, Ecopeace's MENA Regional Forum and MENA 2050's Climate Action Committee.
